When you talk with any of the top consultants or leading practitioners in the profession, they confirm that developing an effective successor generation is the number one issue facing accounting firms today.

Why? The IPA Practice Management Survey shows that 71% of firms have an average equity partner age above 50, and 76% of firms have no formal succession plan. These staggering statistics have many firms scrambling to find the next generation leaders in their firms—leaders who will excel in the areas of practice development, performance management and strategic thinking.

Sophisticated firms realize that leadership development isn't something they can simply delegate to "one of the partners" (someone who may have little-to-no formal training or education on how to develop leaders or serve as an effective mentor and coach)—it's a deliberate process, precisely crafted with an intentional focus.

TPI Leadership Development Model

As our development model illustrates, each TPI participant is immersed in a cohesive development regimen that balances feedback and interaction among their instructors, coach, firm sponsor and classmate peers.

The Solution

Sending your future leaders to limited "quick-fix" programs or conferences isn't a long term prescription for success. In his Harvard Business Review blog, Ron Ashkenas, managing partner of Robert H. Schaffer & Associates, demonstrates that translating leadership training into results requires a special blend of training, mentoring and perpetual practice.

Often copied but never duplicated, The Partner Institute™ (TPI) is proud to stand on its proven record of helping accountants address this challenge head-on. Our comprehensive, three-year experience provides participants with world-class training, and a continuous learning environment, coupled with a culture of accountability that is unmatched.

Since 2004, TPI has served as the accounting profession's premier partner development program—providing world-class content, processes and tools designed specifically for the CPA. Our program adheres to an empowered learning model that meets the unique needs of the adult learner and ensures real-world application of the knowledge within the participant's firm. Additionally, our curriculum has been specifically designed to develop the personal, interpersonal, managerial and organizational capabilities of its participants across five key areas:

Leadership

Productivity

Communication

Practice Development

Practice Management

Whether you are a partner or a partner-to-be, our three-year, multi-disciplinary experience will help you develop the skills and attributes needed to successfully assume a leadership role at your firm.
